Extracts. A Melauchaty Story; One night a fieste and induced me to remain inneh longer than usual, and as I approached the cross it must have been near midnight, and I was surprised to see a garl dressed in black. kneeling before it. The road was so deep and sandy that my borse's fuotsteps were completely muffiel, and I was riding slowly, so that I had M. BOSMAN, Esq. reached almost near enough to hear the world of the mayer she was murinuring, before I was noticed. The girl was half kneeling, half eronching with averted furn and pendant arms, in an attitude of hopeless sorrow, and was sobbing bitteriv. Shocked at the idea of intruding. upon, indeed, of witnessing, grief so stered, was turning slowly away to take another road. when my horse suddenly awayed my sword ring aharply against my apur, and with a nore im elie aprang to her feet in terror shall never forget the be intiful fare, bean tiful still, in spite of the serrow which was wearing her life away, which in the bright moonlight was turned to me. Had she not smoken I should have believed that I had seen a vision of even a nadder world than this. In a Wyndham Street. few words I expressed my shame and regret for disturbing ber. "It is nothing; may God be with you. Adios. Fenor," she said in reply, and mased hostily through a gap inthehedge towards the cottage. At some distance I looked back She had returned and was again kneeling in the same and attitude. The next day I rode over to my friends to ask who the mi !night mourner might be. The mocking, incredulous look which -my tale was at first listened to, changed to one of sorrowful pityas I concluded; and the senurits. I was questioning said. " Ay de mi! that is a bad ! omen: you have seen Carmelita; she is mad, poor girl." I begged she would tell me her story, for my curiosity was beightened by the unusual gravity of the light-hearted Para mayin. "A few years ngo," she began, after seating herself beside me, "Charmelita R - - wan the pretticat girl in Asuncion, the best dancer, and the perriest talker. She had lost a father when a child, but her mother was rich, and she had many suttors, but she favoured only Don Carlos Decoud. He was to have married her in a few weeks, when, in an evil hour, she was seen by Don Francisco Liopez, then a col mel in the army be fell in love with ber, made proposals of the basest character, and was scornfully city. Apply to rejected. He left her, vowing vevenge. A few days afterwards Onvitelita heard, with indescribable terror, that her lover and his brother. had been arrested by the police, and thrown into prison; on what charge no one knew; and soon many others shared the same fate. Weeks passed away one of the prisoners, a countryman of yours, Senor, was set at liberty, and it was then known that a conspiracy had been discovered. The untrator paused, looked round.

at length she left her bed. Better that she had

A Blockade Adventure. And now all seemed destined to go well-will hem. Gliding noiselessly above the bar, they saw no signal boat this time, and were seen by none. The mist, though so slight and transparent, helped to well them from observation, as it also helped to vail the enemy from their sight; and it was not till they were actually premises and diesars. Gibb. Livingston & dartion through the cordon that they could see. Co.'s Wharf. darting through the cordon that they could see, to man vaguely to right and left of their course, the abadowy outlines of two large chips of war. Their own grey-green bull and piled up cotton bales matched too nearly, however. with the waves and the mist to attract attention; and they flew out to sea unchallenged. "We shan't see New York for nothing, this time, by Jove!" laughed Archio, exultingly, view of the harbour. Apply to "I'm not so sure of that," replied Debenham. "We've lost three hours of dirkness, remember; and it will be broad daylight at four." It was broad daylight at four the san shining, the that electing, the sea just ruffling before the breeze. About five the breeze freshened and blew off the last abreds of fog. Then from of the first mate, and of the watch in the grow's nest, there went up a sudden cry of "Steamer tube; the captain to the engine room; and the good boat leaped under the audden access of pressure, like a encer under the spar. At the same matient, the cruises ran up the stars and stripes, wheele I about to give chase, and sent a [1] WO commodious two storied Granito GO shot clean over her bows.
